Cannonading and musketry heard westward, in direction of Jonesboro, on the railroad. Are the rebs retreating down the railroad? Push em back, Uncle Billy, push em back; push era south of our position, anyway. The day passes, and so do great expectations. Not a soul passes on the road--everybody willing to stay at home; all seem tremblingly awaiting developments. Freemans extra proud of their guest, in whose presence they feel protection and favor from the enemy. Getting quite aristocratic now--sleep under a roof. Sunday, September 4.--Greater excitement. Yankees certainly coming --rebels demoralized, and falling back. Along the roads and lanes, and scattering through the woods and fields, straggle the defeated and disheartened Confederates; no longer an army--no longer an organization--disconnected and dispirited mob; devil-may-care airs--every man his own commanding officer j woods decidedly unsafe for blue cloth. The Freemans conceal the writer in their garret; comparatively good view of surrounding country from garret window--small volumes of blue smoke are curling gracefully skyward through the foliage, marking the numerous camp-fires of straggling soldiery. Siss turns spy for the Union cause; she hails the straggling, jaded soldiers in gray, and elicits valuable information. What is the matter, sir? asked she of an intelligent but tired and worn gray-back. Matter, ma am! why the war is over! That s what ails us--we re going home. Another replied, The Yankees are in Atlanta. We did our best to keep em out, but we...
